Plan Your Storm Watching Trip to COOS BAY, NORTH BEND & CHARLESTON, OR

Stellar Storm Watching on Oregon's Adventure Coast

Experience the thrill of winter storms on the Oregon Coast! Oregon's Adventure Coast: Coos Bay, North Bend, Charleston is heralded as the ultimate destination to witness Mother Nature's force. Our premier location for winter storm-watching is unlike anywhere else you've been. Here, heavy seas pummel the jutting sandstone cliffs of Shore Acres State Park, creating monster explosions of foam and sea spray. If you've ever searched for pictures of epic Oregon Coast storms, you've no doubt seen ours.

But it's not just Shore Acres that delivers for winter storm watchers on Oregon's Adventure Coast. Stunning storm views can also be found from the bluff overlooking Bastendorff Beach and Sunset Bay State Park along Cape Arago Highway. The view from Cape Arago State Park isn't too shabby either.

January and February are the Height of Winter Storms

If you've never been storm watching on Oregon's Adventure Coast, now's the time to come. You can experience the storied storms that have put us on the storm watching map. So, pack your raingear and boots, your layers and binoculars, and don't forget your camera. Also, because the best storms don't just happen anytime, make sure to check our Facebook page for High Surf advisories and other conditions that can fuel a signature big-wave storm.

And once the storms subside, there's still plenty to see along this singularly diverse stretch of coastline. Bald eagles are plentiful; elephant seals and California harbor seals bask on Simpson Reef between Shore Acres and Cape Arago; and the vast tide pools host crabs, sea stars, anemone and other creatures. That's before you even get to the whales: Resident gray whales regularly surface between the reef and Cape Arago, while 15,000+ whales migrate to Mexico during the winter.

After your outdoor adventures, our three unique communities afford rich lodging, dining, sight-seeing and gaming venues. As the day winds down, you'll be glad to know that you can warm up, dry off, refuel and slumber, dreaming of the adventure you just had, and what tomorrow has in store.
